Experimental Report Format (APA)

- TITLE PAGE
- INTRODUCTION
  - ABSTRACT
    - Brief summary of the contents of the paper
    - An explanation of the purpose of the study, a statement of the research question(s) the study intends to address.
  - LITERATURE REVIEW
    - A critical assessment of the work done so far on this topic, to show how the current study relates to what has already been done.
- METHODS
  - How the study was carried out
    - (e.g. instruments or equipment, procedures, methods to gather and analyze data)
- RESULTS
  - Exactly what was found in the course of the study.
- DISCUSSION / CONCLUSIONS
  - An interpretation of the results and what they mean
  - State the conclusions and implications of the results, and discuss how it relates to the work reviewed in the literature review; also, point to directions for further work in the area
- REFERENCES
- APPENDIXES (if necessary)
- TABLES AND/OR FIGURES (if necessary)

RESULTS

- The results section presents a summary of the data collected in the experiment.
- First, state the main finding of the experiment.
  - You should be very careful to state only what the data show, not an interpretation of the data.
  - For example, if the data from the study described above showed that there were more correct identifications of the tone when the subject did not have a distracting task, the results section could begin:
    - "Participants' accuracy in identifying the target tone was lower in trials when the distracting task was presented than on trials when it was not presented. The mean percent correct for all participants on trials with distraction was 65% and without distraction was 80%."
- There is usually data to be presented in tables and figures.
  - You must verbally describe in the results section any tables or figures you wish to include. However, discuss only the highlights in the text; if every item is discussed, the table becomes unnecessary.
  - The paragraph following the one in quotes above might be:
    - "Table 1 presents the mean percent correct at each duration of the tone. Percent correct is shown separately for trials with distraction and without distraction. These data show that percent correct increases as the duration of the tone increases. Also, percent correct is higher for trials without distraction at most durations."
- Do not present data in tables or figures when it can be presented as well in a few sentences in the text.
  - You should refer to data concerning the effects of all independent variables, even if they are counter to your hypothesis.
- If you know the proper statistical tests to perform on your data, by all means perform the tests and report the results.
  - However, it is of no use to anyone for you to find a statistical test that you do not understand and apply it blindly in a "cookbook" fashion.
  - Remember that the reader is interested in statistical tests only to determine that they estimate the reliability of your results.
  - The descriptive statistics (means, percentages, scale values, etc. are what the reader wants to know, and they should be presented clearly and completely.)

It will prevent one from facing writerÇÂÂÂs block. Each time you cite something, write the sourceÇÂÂÂs details on a separate piece of paper. (Year, month and date of publication). Put the title of the article itself in italics if the article has not been published by an online publication. Start with sharing the findings of the study. In college, they call it an abstract. It is easy to get lost! Just like a wanderer who cannot find a way out of the woods, a writer needs to know how to write an outline for a research paper. This part defines how the writer will come up with other integral parts (example: Literature Review).Use a couple of tips from college professors.Depending on the tool a writer uses to create documents, he/she should make sure if the different levels of the outline (II, B, 3, c, j) correspond to the headings in the Microsoft Word as most professors accept only DOC & DOCS format.MLA changes its writing guide! Before developing an outline for a research paper, read a recently released version of the manual to see if there are any changes to this research paper format.MLA Research Paper Outline by EssayProMastering APA Research Paper The APA is a format used more frequently when it comes to writing a search article, and it is more complicated than the MLA. Fill out the order form: Write my article, to start the writing process. A search paper sketch is a plan written by the author to avoid staying stuck in the middle of the process.
